Welcome!

The Crown Province of Østgarðr is the greater New York City chapter of the Society for Creative Anachronism, a not-for-profit educational and social organization dedicated to re-creating aspects of medieval and Renaissance culture. We read about the period, make and wear the clothes, make and eat the food, build the swords and hit our friends (who are wearing armor), build and live in the tents, perform the music and drama, etc.

Østgarðr is part of the East Kingdom and has several cantons: Brokenbridge (Brooklyn), Whyt Whey (Manhattan), and Lions End (Nassau County).

If you would like to submit art for our cover page or any other page, please let your Chronicler know!

Committees and Projects

- Østgarðr Trim: Lada collecting designs for vote. Submit pre-order at link.
- How To Pronounce Østgarðr (and An Dubhaigheann!). Old Norse ø: 'e' as in 'get' but with lips ROUNDED. ð like English 'th' in 'then', final 'r' optional; indicates case. Much hilarity ensued as we all turned on sound and practiced together. Angelica: put audio file on Østgarðr website. We turned to Irish to discover that there is no 'B' in An Dubhaigheann—'bh' pronounced 'v', 'an doov', not 'an dub'. Baron of An Dubh. is the Baron OF OF the Dark Abyss.

Other Business

- Jenna to teach popular Pennsic 101 this Sunday 25th, 1pm. Looking for others w/input on parties, parenting, combat

Much Ado About Drafting

by Armiger Catelin Straguhin

I'm going to share a dirty little secret with you: I don't have the room to drape garments in my living space.

I currently reside in 450 square feet (41.8 sq meters) inside the heart of New York with my partner. Like me, they too have hobbies and friends and work to do inside the same 450 sq feet. Lay on top of that a needy cat, a kitchen, a bathroom, never enough closets and a need for an office desk; just the thought of having a dress form and space to drape is all but a fever dream.

Naturally, I can drape upon myself and I have draped on others in order to achieve a good fit, but when you lack space sometimes you'll need to turn to other conventions.

I am, for all intents and purposes, a self-taught drafter. What I've learned was out of necessity more than anything else, since I've wanted to step away from blocky, geometric garments and on to more fitted things. I realized that if I was going to continue making multiple garments for people, I needed to keep drafts on hand because having to draw out the same thing over and over again gets real old real quick.

Am Drafting, What Do?

So, because I am a self-taught drafter, it means that I don't have a specific "one true way" to draft the garments I can make. I'll even admit that my drafting skills are on the amateur level. What I can tell you is some of the best practices that I've picked up from the many tutorials, tips, and tricks I've seen from better drafters and from professionals.

One: Start and maintain a good organizational system for yourself

I currently have a handful of drafts stored in my apartment. I even dug one up recently to make a gothic fitted dress. That draft is from 2019 and if I had not put it in a manilla envelope with the name, date, and garment identification when that draft was initially made I'd have absolutely no idea what I was looking at. Figure out how you want to store your drafts, and make sure that the writing on your labels is eligible.

Two; LABEL EVERYTHING

I'm not just talking about the folders or the containers. I mean every specific piece of draft you build. You are going to forget and you are going to regret it when you pull out the pattern a year or two later. You'll want to label them with the name of the recipient, type of garment (sleeve, bodice, etc), what type of fabric you need to cut (fashion, lining, interlining, etc.), and how many you'll need to cut. These labels will determine your order of operations so you should definitely not skimp on them.

Three; Notches are your friend, use them!

This one I learned from a pro. They can be incredibly helpful when you need to make sure your mirrored fabric sections match up, especially if you've drafted your patterns to have seam allowances in them. These notches are also helpful in matching edges and, with some time and practice, minimize the use of pins.

Four; Don't be afraid to refine

This one I learned from transferring a mathematical draft from a website. The page itself didn't include notches or markers for fitting gores and gussets. After creating a mockup I realized that my life would be a lot easier if I refined the original pattern to include them. As you continue drafting, it never hurts to go back to older drafts and refine them.

Five; If you have to, make a new pattern

Here's an idea: your body is going to change. It's not an opinion, that's a fact. Something that you made five or six years ago may not fit you in the here and the now. Sometimes creating means having to revisit old projects to fit the new you. That doesn't mean you have to get rid of the old drafting pattern, but it might mean you'll need to make a new one.

Last Part; Have fun!

Drafting, like draping, is an important skill to have. In fact, you might prefer draping over drafting and vice versa. That being said, the entire point of creating your own garments is to have fun! You're making because it brings you joy, or fills a necessity in your life, or it's a hobby that keeps you connected with your community. If you're not having fun, why do it?

If you've got more to share about drafting, or draping, or patterning in general, feel free to share them! ■

For the Medieval Table; An Excellent Dish of Plums

A recipe redaction by Friedrich Grimme

As fall comes to the Crown Province, locals will begin to see small, oblong stone fruits in the plum family; varieties include damsons and Italian prune plums. A seasonal delight, these varieties of plum are close to the fruit available in Europe during the SCA period.

The recipe presented comes from Daz büch von gûter spiße, a German cookbook dating from the middle of the fourteenth century, and offers a tasty use of the varieties of European plum which can be found during this season. Simple and accessible to beginner cooks, this recipe produces a tangy-sweet mash which may be enjoyed directly or spread on fine bread. Below is Melitta Weiss Adamson's translation of the original recipe.

9. An excellent dish of plums.

Take bullaces when they are ripe, put them in an earthen pot, and pour wine or water over them, so they are well covered. Let them boil, then mash them, without breaking the stones, and press them through a sieve. Add one slice of white bread, and let it set. Add dry ground herbs, and wine or water, and pour that into the mush. This way you can also prepare cherry-spread or white plum-spread. (Adamson, 2000 pg. 93)

What follows is my redaction of the recipe. Feel free to make any changes to better suit your tastes. I hope you enjoy both cooking and the product of your labors.

An Excellent Dish of Plums

Ingredients

8–10 damsons or Italian prune plums
 $\frac{3}{4}$  cup semi-sweet wine (I used a Riesling)
 $\frac{3}{4}$  cup water (note: you may use wine, water or any combination for a total of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  cups of liquid)
1–2 slices white bread
1 tablespoon honey
 $\frac{3}{4}$  teaspoon of the herbs of your choice (I used sage, savory and mint,  $\frac{1}{4}$  teaspoon each)

Total Preparation and Cooking time: 50-40 minutes

Preparation

1. Cut the crust off the bread. Cut or tear the bread into small pieces and reserve.
2. Place the fruit in a small, non-reactive saucepan and cover with the wine/water.
3. Over medium heat, bring the wine/water to a simmer. Lower the heat and allow the fruit to simmer until it is very soft, about 10–12 minutes.
4. Remove the fruit from the pot, and place them in a sieve (I used a modern metal mesh sieve) with a medium or large bowl beneath it. Reserve the cooking liquid for later.
5. Using a spoon or fork, press the fruit through the sieve. Remove the pits once the fruit is crushed enough, to make the process easier. (For those who have never pressed something through a sieve: press the fruit into the sieve with the back of a spoon, working the spoon back and forth. Liquid will pour out first, with the pulp collecting on the underside of the sieve. Scrape the pulp into the bowl with the liquid. The inside of the sieve will retain the fibrous parts of the pulp and skin. This will be discarded at the end of the pressing process.)
6. To the pressings (juice and pulp), add about half of the torn bread, the honey, and the herbs. Mix this gently with a spoon. Add enough of the cooking liquid to soften the bread thoroughly.
7. Allow the mixture to rest for 10–15 minutes. Check every five minutes and add some of the cooking liquid as needed. Over this time, the bread will soften to a mush.
8. With a fork, press and mix the mush to a smooth consistency. If your mush is too thick to spread, add a little more of the cooking liquid.
9. If your mush is lumpy, you may press it through a sieve again to obtain a smoother texture. ■

Utensils

Non-reactive sauce pan (glass, ceramic or steel)
Non-reactive mixing bowl
Measuring cup
Sieve
Fork, spoon and bread knife (though any blade will do in a pinch)
